Expert witnesses in famous trials: Trial of Socrates

Socrates was accused of various counts of impiety based in part on his belief that the sun and moon were not gods, but merely masses of stone.

In his defense, Socrates called an “expert” scholar of the times, Themistocles, to testify to the composition of the sun and moon.

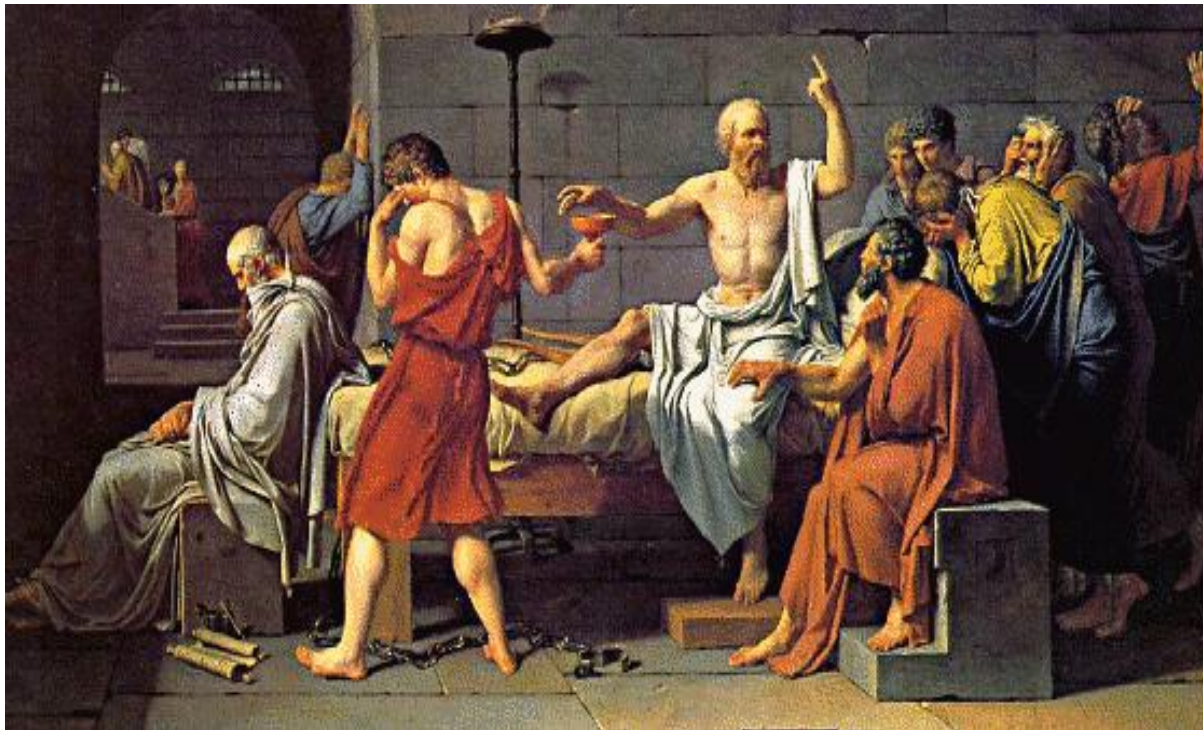

Themistocles*, ancient Greek expert on celestial bodies.

*translates to “glory of the law”

Trial of Socrates

Unfortunately, Themistocles' testimony was held to be inadmissible after an ancient Daubert-like challenge.

Socrates was found guilty and under Athenian law his execution was accomplished by drinking a cup of poisoned hemlock.

Expert witnesses in famous trials: Trial of Galileo

Galileo was called before the Inquisition to discuss his support for the Copernican theory that the earth orbits the sun.

Galileo argued that changing ocean tides proved that the earth revolved around a stationary sun.

In his defense, Galileo called Giovanni Ciampoli, a close friend and respected scientist, as an expert witness to support his theory on ocean tides.

Trial of Galileo

Cross examination revealed that Ciampoli had previously written several articles discussing a different theory for changing ocean tides.

Ciampoli's other theory was that ocean tides were caused by the movements of a "gigantic fire-breathing monster in a distant part of the sea."

Ciampoli's testimony was completely discredited and Galileo spent the remainder of his life in prison and/or under house arrest.

Expert witnesses in famous trials: Trial of Chicago Black Sox

Eight members of the 1919 Chicago White Sox were accused conspiring with a group of notorious gamblers to fix the outcome of the World Series. The players were put on trial for conspiracy to defraud.

Prosecution expert witness George “Bull” Delaney of the Gashouse Gorillas testified as an expert on the specifics of “fixing” a baseball game.

George “Bull” Delaney, Gashouse Gorillas

Trial of Chicago Black Sox

Defense attorneys produced a video showing Delaney cheating in a baseball game with the Bugs Bunny All Stars.

Proof of Delaney's cheating destroyed his credibility as an expert witness. The jury took only 3 hours to deliberate and found the players not guilty.

What did I learn at the Expert Witness Museum?

- Expert witnesses can make or break your case
- You need to find as much information as you can about all the experts in your case
 - Their testimony may previously have been excluded
 - They may have damaging information in their past
- It is difficult to find information on experts

What sources do you currently use to find expert information?

- Free online sources (e.g. Google)
 - Results are haphazard at best
 - Results are not compiled in a useable format
 - It is time consuming to review all the information
- Email requests to colleagues
 - Requests often go unanswered
 - Replies supply only minimal information
 - You may get information on a familiar expert but not the “best” expert
- Other providers
 - The information provided is not comprehensive
 - It may take days to obtain results

Kathleen Hermans Messerschmidt & Frederick Humeston, Plaintiff, v. ... 2007 WL 5917131 Superior Court of New Jersey. Trial Transcript (Approx. 28 pages)

- DR. AVORN: That's right.
- MR. LANIER: Are you -- I noticed as I look through your CV, for example, you are the chief of the division -- for the last eight years or so, eight plus years, Chief of the Division of Pharmacoepidemiology and Pharmacoconomics, Department of Medicine at Brigham and Women's Hospital. What does that mean?
- DR. AVORN: Right. The -- the longest division name in the hospital. Pharmacoepidemiology is the study of the side effects of drugs and how drugs -- what outcome drugs have. It's from "pharmaco" for drugs and epidemiology which is the study of illness in groups of patients. And pharmacoconomics is the study of how much drugs cost, whether they are good value for the money. How we can take -- everyone knows about how drug budgets and bills are getting unaffordable. And one of the things we do research on is how to figure out how patients, hospitals, health care systems like Medicaid and Medicare can stretch their drug dollars by getting the drugs that are - - give you the most bang for the buck and are the most cost effective. So that's the pharmacoconomics piece of what we do.
- MR. LANIER: And by you being the Chief of the Division of that, what does that mean you do?
- DR. AVORN: That means that I lead a research group of about 25 people, half of whom are doctors on the Harvard faculty. Many of us also practice medicine in the hospital and we do -- as well as our clinical activities, we do these studies about drug risk, drug benefits, 'cause drugs certainly have lots of benefits and drug cost effectiveness or how much value they have for how much they cost.
- MR. LANIER: And -- and -- I don't want to get to the meat of your testimony yet because I start to prove you up as an expert, but have you studied Vioxx?
- DR. AVORN: Yes, we have.
- MR. LANIER: Okay. Another aspect of your CV that I'd like you to explain is there's this international society for pharmacoepidemiology, where it looks like for '97-'98, you were the president. What -- what is that society that you're a part of and [inaudible] up?
